Today's lecture on Power Excel delivery for judicial officers was very useful.The speaker explained complex Excel tools in a simple way and showed how they can help in court management, case tracking, data analysis, and reporting. These skills can save time, reduce manual errors, and improve efficiency in judicial work.
The key benefit is that Excel allows officers to handle data more accurately and make informed decisions based on facts and figures. However, to get real value, this learning should be practical. Regular hands-on exercises, use of real court data, and follow-up practice sessions will help officers apply these skills confidently in their daily work.

Question: Suggestions/Comment (mandatory): *

The session on public procurement was insightful and thoughtfully delivered. The instructor presented the subject with clarity and depth, enabling judicial officers to grasp both the legal framework and its practical application. The emphasis on transparency, fairness, and accountability was particularly relevant to our judicial responsibilities. The discussion of common procedural lapses and emerging issues added real value and strengthened our understanding of procurement-related disputes. Overall, the session contributed meaningfully to our professional capacity, and future classes may benefit further from extended case-based discussion and practical illustrations.

Submitted: 02 Jan 2026, 03:16 PM

Question: Suggestions/Comment (mandatory): *

The session on HR management was informative and well-structured, covering key concepts relevant to effective workplace administration and people management. The resource person explained the subject clearly and highlighted practical issues faced in organizational settings.
However, the time allocated for the session was quite limited due to Friday, which restricted deeper discussion and interaction. Several important aspects of HR management, such as practical application and case-based examples, could not be covered in sufficient detail.
Overall, the session was beneficial, but a longer duration on a regular working day would allow for better understanding, participation, and more meaningful learning outcomes.

The exercise involved drafting three key disciplinary documents: the charge sheet, the statement of allegations, and the final show cause notice. It was practical because it allowed participants to apply legal principles in real drafting, rather than just learning theory. Through this, we learned how to present facts clearly, align allegations with evidence, and use precise, neutral language. It also highlighted the proper sequence and structure required in such documents. Overall, it helped build confidence in preparing these documents correctly and professionally.

The lecture effectively explained how public management systems can enhance efficiency, accountability, and service delivery within the judiciary, particularly in relation to financial management. Concepts such as planning, transparency, and performance management were well connected to judicial budgeting, allocation of funds, and financial oversight of courts. However, the discussion remained largely theoretical and did not sufficiently address practical financial challenges faced by the judiciary, including budgetary constraints, delayed fund releases, weak financial controls, and limited capacity in financial planning. It also did not fully explore how financial management reforms can be implemented without affecting judicial independence. Overall, the session offered a useful conceptual framework but would benefit from deeper engagement with judiciary-specific financial constraints and practical, context-based reform measures.

Question: Suggestions/Comment (mandatory): *

The lecture on ADR offered a general overview, it was largely theoretical and provided limited practical examples or procedural clarity. Time constraints affected the depth of discussion, which focused primarily on the Islamabad ADR Act, 2017, with minimal reference to KP ADR Act . Future sessions would benefit from a more structured and practical approach.

Question: Suggestions/Comment (mandatory): *

not satisfactory

Submitted: 29 Jan 2026, 06:42 PM

Question: Suggestions/Comment (mandatory): *

The learned resource person shared useful perspectives; however, some time was spent on a critical discussion of the CNSA, which is beyond the judicial mandate, as judges are bound to decide cases strictly in accordance with the prevailing law. Additionally, a significant portion of the session focused on the mode of promotion, which was not directly related to the assigned topic. Greater focus on the core subject would have further enriched the session.
